I was blown out of my swivel chair by "Sense and Sensibility", the Marvel graphic novel. The thing is just adorable. It's done in pinks and pastels and tasteful little doll-like characters that warmed up my heart like a toaster. For any fan of the book, or for any person with a beating heart, this book is a must-impulse-buy. For any fan of the book, or for any person with a beating heart, this book is a must-impulse-buy. It's an excellent adaptation that is surprisingly thorough by Nancy Butler, and so much money in the bank for artist Sonny Liew. Seriously, Sonny Liew's artwork makes the entire adaptation work. If you haven't heard of him before, I recommend a large dose of Googling to preview some of his characters. The faces and features for all of the characters in "Sense and Sensibility" really stand out and match the personalities in the book; and bonus, you can recognize the characters immediately on every page. The last Marvel adaptation of "Pride and Prejudice" has been a disappointment for me in the illustration department; with its 70's-tastic purple-lipped-ladies with menacing eyes and bosoms strewn hither and thither. I think Marvel got it right with Liew, who deeply understands that a sweet story needs pretty pictures. The story of the Dashwood sisters by Austen is endearing on its own, with the romantic twists and the "coming-of-age" for all its characters.
