"The Making of a Prophet" is a short, but very deep book (174 pages). It helps awaken a potential prophet no matter where they find themselves, such as within performance-driven ministries or in the midst of their wilderness experiences. It teaches about what is likely to happen during the making process of a prophetâ |.from waiting periods between the calling and the anointing, to the potterâ s wheel process, to training experiences, to walking out the prophetic anointing in love to make Jesus (Yeshua) and Godâ s Kingdom purposes bigger and the prophet smaller. There are warnings to readers to be sure people are being called into the prophecy vocation and teaches about different kinds of prophets. Most people who have accepted Jesus (Yeshua) into their hearts are probably prophets in some kind of way(s) but some people move into a prophetic vocation. These people really need to count the cost because the cost will be highâ |possibly leaving what they are used to and people they are used to being with, enduring spiritual warfare, and the cost of not delivering messages from God to people He wants them spoken to. Learning that being a prophet will bring much spiritual warfare was something I hadnâ t really taken in before and Iâ m glad it was emphasized in this book. It also showed me how to notice false or immature prophets better; sometimes they want special titles and want a lot of credit when a prophecy comes true. Also, it made me more aware of some of the different prophetic callings and that competition in the prophetic vocation is a sign of immaturity.

I have to laugh at the reason the author said she wrote her book on the prophetic. It seems when she was looking there didn't seem to be any simple book on the prophetic out there. I was the same and felt called to write a simple book on the prophetic also for the same reason. It is always good to learn from a person that has been called like you but has achieved a lot more success and notoriety than you.. Just knowing the people who posted endorsements on her book is one thing, but having them as personal friends who would stake their reputation on you is quite another. Jennifer tackles the subject of the call, the sifting and preparation of a prophet with eloquence and is serious in what she says but it is kind of funny too. As she mentioned the pitfalls, the strategies of the enemy, the temptations, and all the ways you can be misled and do things wrong, I found myself shaking my head in agreement in the fact that if I had not done it, I know of people who had. I personally think that this book would be very valuable for any person who has a feeling they are called or has been told by the Lord and confirmed that are called to the office of prophet. It is no nonsense, practical advice and encouragement to the battle weary among us who are on the path to the office of prophet, or even to us who are in the office but have not reached the heights that God has for us. If you are considering the price of the book, just consider this book will help you walk into the destiny that God planned for you since the beginning of time. A thousand dollars would not be too much to pay for that help.

The Bible tells us that in the last days, God will pour out His Spirit on all flesh (Acts 2:17). These last days have been in effect since the Day of Pentecost, and this promised outpouring of the Holy Spirit includes men, women, young and old; none are except. A vital part of this "last days outpouring" includes a release of the prophetic. Every single Christian has the ability to prophesy residing in his/her spirit since the Holy Spirit is the One who empowers us to prophesy. Though every believer can prophesy, there are certain individuals who have been set apart to fulfill the role of a prophet in the body of Christ. In The Making of a Prophet, seasoned prophetic voice and Charisma news editor, Jennifer LeClaire delivers an essential guidebook "over a decade in the making" helping you either: a) identify your calling as a prophet or b) show you how to hear God's voice from the ministry of the prophet. Just as there are those selected to be teachers, pastors, evangelists and apostles, there are also people that God has specifically and uniquely fashioned to fulfill the office of a prophet. This book is as much for those called as prophets it is for the greater body of Christ to understand, value, and appropriately draw from the Scripture-established prophetic office. The Making of a Prophet is a journey unlike any that I have taken in recent years.
